Somewhere in the west, we have the great, big, wide, open spaces---where some hogs are hogs---and others are only little runts.

And this story is all about the little runt that, always gets the worst of everything, and eventually proves that one hard knock right after another, can almost make a "man" out of a hog.

Farmer Al, is feeding his flock, but all the other porkers throw the runt out of the line and eat all the food. Then when he wants to enjoy a ride on his pushmobile, the other rowdies crowd on and leave him hanging on the rear.

The runt has a very hard struggle holding on, and when the whole car spills in a snow bank, the rest blame it on the runt.

Later that day, he is befriended by Fido pup and taken right home for a swell meal.

The other rowdies are having a frolic across the country side and encountered slippery Sam who entices them by food into his wagon, and then he loads them into a freight car. The big baby bullies now cry for help.

The runt and Fido hear their cries and rush to the rescue. They jump aboard the train, and release the prisoners. The grateful rowdies try to show their appreciation by carrying Fido and the runt home on their shoulders. Farmer Al takes the runt and Fido right into his house for a big feed.

Aesop Says: "Even a pig can bring home the bacon."
